My First Trip Abroad

Last summer I travelled abroad for the first time. My family and I went to Georgia. It was a long journey: first we took a taxi to the airport, then we had a four-hour flight. Our flight had a two-hour delay, so we were very tired when we arrived. We stayed in a small hotel near the coast. Every day we went sightseeing with a tour guide. I have never seen such beautiful mountains! I bought souvenirs for all my friends. I have already been to Georgia, so next year I want to visit Turkey.

The Aral Sea

The Aral Sea was once the fourth largest lake in the world. In the 1960s, the water from two big rivers was used for cotton fields. Year by year the sea became smaller. Now a large part of it is a desert. Many fish died, and the local people lost their jobs. Today, millions of trees are being planted on the dry seabed to stop the sand and salt storms. A small part of the sea in the north has been saved, and fish have returned there.

A Wedding to Remember

Last summer I went to my cousin's wedding in Fergana. Over five hundred guests came. While the guests were arriving, musicians were playing the drums and the karnay. The bride was wearing a beautiful white dress. At about nine o'clock, while everyone was dancing, the lights suddenly went out! For a few minutes, nobody could see anything. But the musicians didn't stop. They were still playing when the lights came back on. Everyone laughed, and the party continued until midnight.

Can You Believe Everything Online?

Last month a video appeared on social media. It showed a 'shark' swimming in a street in Tashkent after heavy rain. Although it was fake news, more than 100,000 people shared it in one day. Some people were really scared. However, a journalist decided to fact-check the video. She found that the shark was from a film made in 2015. Despite this, many people still believed the video was real. The lesson is simple: before you share a headline, check where it comes from.

1. The video showed a shark in Tashkent. _____
