Learning Without Walls

When schools around the world closed in 2020, millions of students suddenly found themselves learning through a screen. For some it was a disaster; for others it was the beginning of a new way of studying. Five years later, online education is no longer an emergency solution. It has become a normal part of life for students of all ages.

The advantages are obvious. A student in a small village can now watch lectures from the best universities in the world, often for free. Online courses are flexible: learners can study at night, pause a video, and watch difficult parts again. For adults with jobs and families, this flexibility is often the only way to continue their education.

However, research shows that online learning is not equally effective for everyone. A study of 50,000 university students found that weaker students did worse online than in the classroom, while strong students did equally well in both. The main problem, researchers say, is self-discipline. At home there are many distractions — phones, games, family — and without a teacher in the room, it is easy to fall behind.

Another problem is the lack of interaction. Learning is not only about information; it is also about discussion, questions and friendship. Many students say they felt lonely during online courses, and some lost their motivation completely. "I could watch a lecture," one student remembers, "but I couldn't turn to my friend and say, 'Did you understand that?'"

Because of this, many schools now use a mix of both methods, known as blended learning. Students learn new information online at their own speed and then come to class to practise, discuss and ask questions. Early results are promising: in schools using blended learning, students' marks have risen by an average of eight per cent.

Experts believe that the future of education will not be online or offline, but both. As long as students learn how to manage their time and teachers learn how to use technology wisely, the classroom of the future may have no walls at all.

Will Robots Take Our Jobs?

In 2013, two Oxford researchers published a report that shocked the world. They said that 47 per cent of jobs in the United States could be done by computers within twenty years. Newspapers immediately predicted mass unemployment. Ten years later, however, the picture looks very different.

It is true that automation has replaced many routine jobs. Supermarkets have self-service checkouts, banks need fewer cashiers, and factories use robots to build cars. Yet unemployment in most developed countries is lower today than it was in 2013. Why? Because technology also creates new jobs — many of which did not exist twenty years ago, such as app developers, data analysts and social media managers.

The arrival of artificial intelligence has made the debate more urgent. Unlike earlier machines, AI can write texts, translate languages and even diagnose illnesses. A recent survey found that office workers who used AI tools finished their tasks 40 per cent faster. Some experts warned that jobs in translation, journalism and customer service were now at risk.

Other experts are more optimistic. They argue that AI will not replace people but will change what people do. A doctor who uses AI to analyse X-rays will have more time to talk to patients. A teacher who uses AI to check homework will have more time to help weaker students. In other words, the more routine work machines do, the more time humans have for creative and social tasks.

What should young people do? Most experts agree on the answer: develop skills that machines find difficult, such as creativity, communication and critical thinking — and never stop learning.

4 Model essay · Namuna (~180 words)

[Introduction] It is often argued that technology does more harm than good to young people. While I accept that it has some negative effects, I strongly believe that its benefits are far greater.

[Reason 1] The main reason is that technology gives teenagers access to knowledge, which means that a student in a small village can now learn from the best teachers in the world. For instance, my cousin taught himself programming through free online courses.

[Reason 2] Moreover, technology helps young people stay connected. Although some people claim that phones make teenagers lonely, video calls allow families to keep in touch when relatives work abroad. If this technology did not exist, many families would feel much more isolated.

[Conclusion] All things considered, technology can be harmful if it is misused. However, I am convinced that, when it is used wisely, it improves young people's lives.

4 Reading · Reading Part 3 format

Read the text. Choose the correct heading for each paragraph (1–6) from A–H. There are two extra headings. — 6 abzats, 8 sarlavha (2 ta ortiqcha)

City or Village?

1. _____ For the first time in history, more people live in cities than in the countryside. By 2050, the United Nations predicts, almost seven out of ten people on Earth will be city dwellers. In Uzbekistan too, young people from rural areas move to Tashkent every year in search of work and education.

2. _____ The reasons are easy to understand. Cities offer universities, hospitals, cinemas and, most importantly, jobs. Salaries are usually higher, and there are more opportunities to build a career. If my cousin hadn't moved to the capital, he would never have found work as a programmer.

3. _____ But city life has a price. Rent can take half of a young worker's salary, and many people spend two hours a day commuting. Traffic jams, noise and poor air quality are part of everyday life, and doctors link them to stress and health problems.

4. _____ Villages, meanwhile, face the opposite problem. When young people leave, schools close, shops disappear and only the elderly stay behind. Some villages in Europe have so few residents that they offer free houses to anyone who agrees to live there.

5. _____ Interestingly, technology may change this trend. With fast internet, many people can now work from home. After 2020, thousands of workers left big cities for smaller towns, where houses are cheaper and life is calmer, while keeping their city jobs.

6. _____ Perhaps the answer is not choosing one or the other but making both better. If villages had good roads, internet and schools, fewer people would need to leave. And if cities had more parks and better public transport, living there would be far more pleasant.

Headings

A) A balance between two worlds

💬 Moving to the city

Laylo: I heard you're moving to Tashkent!

Jamshid: Yeah, next month. I got into university.

Laylo: Congrats! Are you excited?

Jamshid: Excited and nervous. If I'd known how expensive rent was, I'd have saved more.

Laylo: You'll be fine. And you can always come back for weekends.

Jamshid: Definitely. I'll miss the peace and quiet here.

[Introduction] People have different views on whether a university degree is necessary for a successful career. While some argue that a degree is essential, others believe that practical skills matter more. I think both are important, but skills are becoming more valuable.

[View A] On the one hand, a degree gives students deep knowledge and a qualification that employers trust. Supporters of this view point out that doctors and engineers cannot work without a university education.

[View B] On the other hand, many successful people never finished university. Companies that hire programmers or designers often care more about a strong portfolio than a diploma. For example, a friend of mine got a job at an IT company after taking a six-month online course.

[Conclusion] In my view, although a degree is still important for some professions, practical skills are now the key to most careers, because the job market changes faster than university programmes.

Four-day working weeks are being tested by companies around the world. In a recent trial in the UK, 61 companies reduced working hours without reducing salaries. After six months, most companies reported that productivity had stayed the same or even increased. Employees said they felt less stressed and had more time for their families. However, not every job can be done in four days. Hospitals, schools and shops need staff every day, so for them the idea is more difficult.

In the UK trial, salaries were not reduced, and (1) _____ did not fall. Workers felt less (2) _____. But the idea is difficult for places like hospitals and (3) _____, which need (4) _____ every day.

The Truth About Sugar

Fifty years ago, most doctors believed that fat was the main enemy of a healthy diet. Supermarkets filled their shelves with "low-fat" yoghurts, biscuits and drinks. What few people noticed was that, to keep these products tasty, manufacturers added large amounts of sugar instead. Today many scientists think this was one of the biggest mistakes in the history of nutrition.

The World Health Organization recommends that adults eat no more than 25 grams — about six teaspoons — of added sugar a day. Yet the average teenager in many countries eats three times that amount. A single can of cola contains around 35 grams, which is already more than the daily limit.

Sugar is not only found in sweets. It is hidden in products that most people don't think of as sweet, such as ketchup, bread, sauces and even some "healthy" breakfast cereals. Reading labels is the only way to know what we are really eating, but the information is often printed in tiny letters, and sugar may appear under names like glucose, fructose or syrup.

Too much sugar has been linked to obesity, type 2 diabetes and tooth decay. Some studies also suggest that diets which are high in sugar may affect mood and concentration, although more research is needed.

Several countries have decided to act. Mexico, the UK and others have introduced a "sugar tax" on sweet drinks. In the UK, many companies reduced the sugar in their drinks before the tax even started, because they did not want to pay it. Critics, however, say that such taxes punish poor families, who spend a larger part of their income on food.

Nutritionists agree that we don't need to remove sugar completely. A piece of cake at a birthday party is not a problem. The key, as with most things, is moderation — and knowing where sugar is hiding.

4 Reading · Questions

The Sea That Disappeared

Sixty years ago, the Aral Sea was the fourth-largest lake in the world. Fishing boats worked on its waters, and the town of Muynak was a busy port with a large fish factory. Today, ships lie rusting in the sand, and the nearest water is more than a hundred kilometres away.

The disaster began in the 1960s, when Soviet planners decided to use the water of the Amu Darya and Syr Darya rivers to grow cotton in the desert. Huge canals were built, and by the 1980s very little water reached the sea. It started to shrink rapidly. By 2010 it had lost about ninety per cent of its water.

The consequences have been terrible. As the sea dried, the climate of the region became more extreme: summers are hotter, winters colder, and rain is rarer. Strong winds now carry salt and dust from the dry sea bed across hundreds of kilometres, damaging crops and people's health. Thousands of fishermen lost their jobs.

Yet there is some hope. In the north, Kazakhstan built a dam in 2005, and the small northern part of the sea has started to recover: the water level has risen and fish have returned. In Uzbekistan, a huge project is planting desert plants, such as saxaul, on the dry sea bed. Their roots hold the sand and stop the salt storms. More than 1.7 million hectares have already been planted.

The story of the Aral Sea is often called one of the worst environmental disasters of the 20th century. Many local people say, "If only we had understood the consequences earlier." It is high time the world learnt from this lesson.

[Introduction] Studying abroad has become increasingly popular among young people in Uzbekistan. This essay will discuss its main advantages and disadvantages.

[Advantages] The main advantage of studying abroad is that students receive an international education and improve their language skills quickly. Another benefit is that students who live alone become more independent and confident.

[Disadvantages] However, there are also some drawbacks. Studying abroad is very expensive, so many families have to take loans. Moreover, students often feel homesick, which can be very stressful, especially during the first year.

[Conclusion] On balance, I believe the advantages outweigh the disadvantages as long as students are well prepared and have enough financial support.

Too Many Tourists?

1. _____ Venice, a city of 50,000 residents, receives more than 20 million visitors a year. On a summer day, the narrow streets are so crowded that locals can hardly walk to work. Many residents have left, and the city has been called a "theme park" rather than a living town.

2. _____ Venice is not alone. From Barcelona to Bali, popular places are struggling with the same problem. Rents have risen because flats are rented to tourists, and traditional shops have been replaced by souvenir stalls selling the same cheap products.

3. _____ Old monuments suffer too. Millions of feet wear down ancient stone floors, and the breath of thousands of visitors changes the temperature and humidity inside old buildings, damaging paintings and tiles.

4. _____ Some cities have started to fight back. Venice now charges day-trippers an entrance fee, Amsterdam has banned new souvenir shops in the centre, and the famous Machu Picchu in Peru allows only a limited number of visitors per day, who must book in advance.

5. _____ For Uzbekistan, where tourism is growing fast, these examples are important lessons. Samarkand, Bukhara and Khiva welcomed millions of visitors last year, and the number is rising. Tourism brings income and jobs, especially for hotels, restaurants and local craftspeople.

6. _____ The challenge is to grow without losing authenticity. Experts suggest spreading tourists across the year and across the country, developing eco-tourism in the mountains, and involving local communities in decisions. Despite the difficulties, they believe a balance is possible.

These days, mass tourism is a hot topic. In my opinion, tourism is useful for our country (1) despite it causes some problems. One of the main reasons why I think so (2) are that it creates jobs. For example, my uncle, (3) which works in a hotel, (4) have been working there since 2019. Admittedly, old buildings can (5) damage by too many visitors. However, if the government (6) will control the number of tourists, this problem could be solved. I wish more people (7) visit our mountains, (8) who are beautiful and less crowded. All things considered, tourism brings more benefits than problems.

A Week Without Notifications

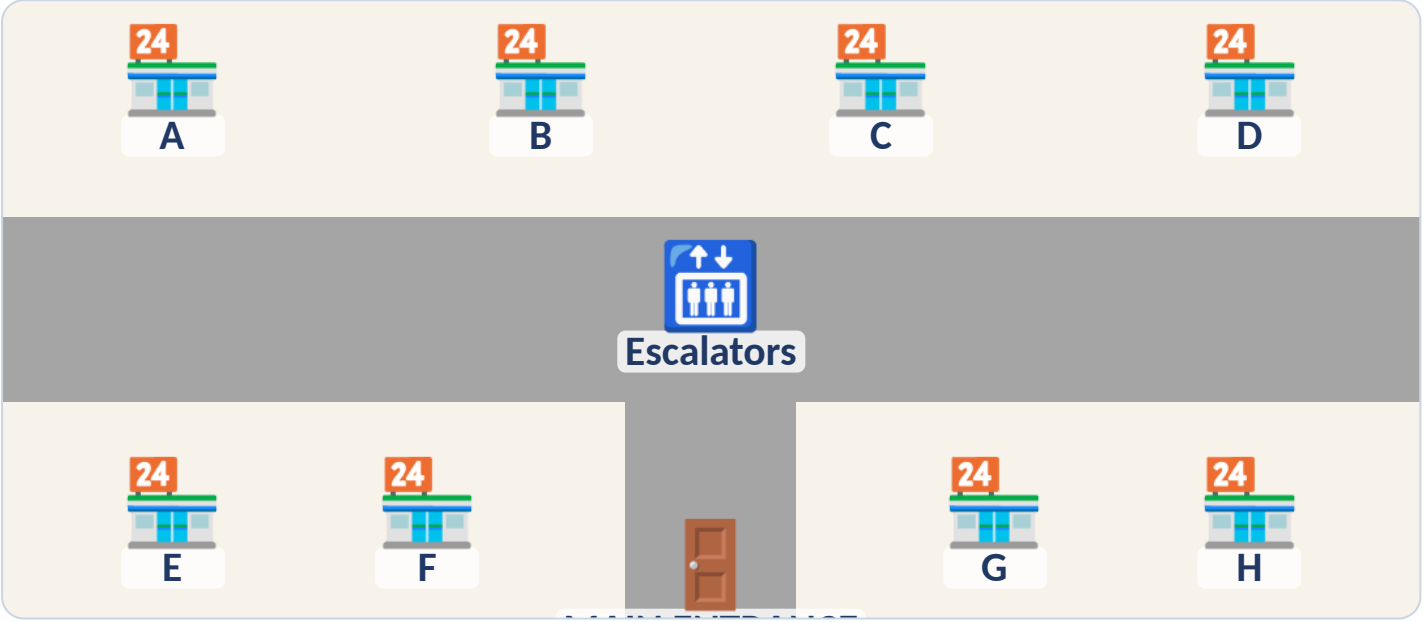

Last month our class did an experiment: for seven days, we switched off all notifications on our phones. We could still use social media, but only when we decided to open the apps — not when the phone told us to. At first it felt strange. On the first day, I checked my phone more than fifty times, just in case I had missed something. By the third day, however, I noticed that I was checking it much (1) _____. My concentration in lessons improved, I felt less stressed, and I finished my homework faster. Some students found the experiment harder. My friend Aziz said he felt anxious, because he was afraid of missing important messages from his (2) _____ group. Interestingly, at the end of the week, nobody had missed anything important. Our teacher explained that for some people social media is almost an addiction, and that apps are designed to keep us on our (3) _____ as long as possible, and notifications are one of their most powerful tools. After the experiment, most of us decided to keep our (4) _____ switched off for at least some apps. I still use social media every day, but now it feels like a choice rather than an (5) _____. 4 Model essay · Namuna (~180 words)

[Introduction] Nowadays, many young people spend more than five hours a day on social media. This essay will look at the main problems this causes and suggest some solutions.

[Problems] One serious problem is that teenagers sleep less, which leads to poor concentration at school. Another problem is self-esteem: young people compare themselves with perfect photos and feel inadequate.

[Solutions] One solution would be to turn off notifications and set daily time limits on phones. If schools taught digital skills, students would understand how algorithms keep them online. Parents should also be good role models and avoid using phones at dinner.

[Conclusion] To sum up, the overuse of social media harms young people's sleep and confidence, but these problems can be reduced if schools, parents and teenagers themselves take action.

Money Lessons They Never Taught Us

Ask a group of eighteen-year-olds how a loan works or what an interest rate is, and many will not know the answer. According to an international survey, only one in three young adults can answer basic questions about money. Yet the same young people will soon be signing phone contracts, renting flats and perhaps taking their first loans.

Part of the problem is that money is rarely discussed at school or at home. In many families, talking about salaries and debts is considered impolite. As a result, young people often learn about money the hard way — by making mistakes.

Online shopping and digital payments have made things more complicated. When we pay with a card or phone, money feels less real than when we hand over cash. Studies have shown that people spend up to thirty per cent more when they pay by card. "Buy now, pay later" services, which are very popular among teenagers, make it even easier to buy things we cannot afford.

Some countries have decided that financial literacy should be taught at school. In the UK, it has been part of the national curriculum since 2014, and in several US states students must pass a personal finance course before they can graduate. Early research suggests that these students are less likely to get into serious debt.

What can young people do on their own? Experts recommend three simple habits: write down every expense for a month to see where the money goes; save a fixed part of every income, even if it is small; and wait 24 hours before buying anything expensive. "If you still want it tomorrow," one adviser says, "then buy it."

4 Reading · Questions

1. What did the international survey show?
A) Most young adults understand loans.
B) Only a third of young adults have basic money knowledge.
C) Young people don't use money.
D) Schools teach finance well.

2. Why do people spend more when they pay by card?
A) Cards are cheaper.
B) Money feels less real.
C) Shops give discounts.
D) They have more money.

3. What has happened in the UK since 2014?
A) Cards have been banned for teenagers.
B) Financial literacy has been taught at school.
C) Students must work part-time.
D) Loans have become cheaper.

4. What is the purpose of the 24-hour rule?
A) to find a cheaper shop
B) to avoid impulse buying
C) to save on interest
D) to compare prices online

5. Many families avoid talking about money. _____

6. "Buy now, pay later" services are mainly used by older people. _____

7. All US states require a finance course. _____

8. Students who study finance are less likely to have serious debt. _____

The Library That Never Sleeps

In the centre of Tashkent, a new kind of library opened last year. It is open 24 hours a day, and it has no librarians at night. Visitors scan their ID card at the door, and a camera system does the rest. The library's goal is simple: to give everyone a place to learn. At first, many people doubted the idea. "Who will go to a (1) _____ at three in the morning?" one journalist asked. The answer surprised everyone: students. During exam periods, more than two hundred students use the library every (2) _____. Many of them share small flats where it is impossible to study quietly at home. The library also has study rooms that can be booked online, and a café where visitors can buy coffee from a machine. So far, nothing has been stolen, which shows that the (3) _____ system works. The project has been so successful that two more 24-hour libraries are being planned. "If we had known how popular it would be," the director says, "we would have built a bigger (4) _____." For many students, the library has become a second (5) _____ — a quiet place in a noisy city, and somewhere to meet people with the same (6) _____: to study.

2 Reading Part 3 (Questions 7–11)

Choose the correct heading for each paragraph (A–G). There are two extra headings.

3 Reading Part 4 (Questions 12–20)

Questions 12–15: A, B, C or D. Questions 16–20: True, False or No Information.

The Silent Language of Space

When astronaut Chris Hadfield returned to Earth in 2013 after five months on the International Space Station, he found it difficult to walk. His legs had become weak, his sense of balance was confused, and for several days he dropped things, because in space objects simply float when you let them go.

These effects are well known. In zero gravity, muscles and bones lose strength because they are not needed to support the body. Astronauts can lose up to two per cent of their bone mass every month. To slow this down, they must exercise for about two hours every day using special machines.

Space also affects the mind. Living in a small space with the same few people for months can cause stress and conflicts. For this reason, astronauts are carefully selected not only for their physical health but also for their ability to work in a team and stay calm under pressure.

As space agencies plan missions to Mars, which could last up to three years, these problems are becoming more urgent. Scientists are testing new solutions, from artificial gravity to virtual-reality programs that let astronauts "walk" in a forest. Despite the challenges, most experts believe a human will set foot on Mars before 2040.

12. Why did Hadfield drop things after returning?
A) His hands were injured.
B) He was used to objects floating.
C) He was very tired.
D) His eyesight was poor.

13. Why do astronauts exercise two hours a day?
A) to stay happy
B) to slow bone and muscle loss
C) to prepare for Mars
D) because they are bored

14. Why are personality skills important for astronauts?
A) They must speak many languages.
B) They live closely together for a long time.
C) They have to give interviews.
D) They work alone.

15. What is the main topic of the last paragraph?
A) The history of space travel
B) Life on Mars
C) Preparing for longer missions
D) Virtual-reality games

16. Hadfield spent five months in space. _____

17. Astronauts lose bone mass in space. _____

18. Astronauts are chosen only for their physical health. _____

19. A Mars mission could last three years. _____

20. Artificial gravity has already been used on the space station. _____
