Learning from the Village

Aziza lives in a small village in Surkhandarya, three hundred kilometres from the nearest university. Two years ago she started a distance learning degree in computer science. 'If I hadn't had this chance, I would be working in the fields now,' she says. Every morning she watches video lessons and then does her assignments. The biggest problem is the connection: when it rains, the internet often stops working. Aziza admits that self-discipline is not easy. 'At home there are a lot of distractions — my little brothers, housework, my phone.' However, she has never missed a deadline. Her dream is to work remotely for an international company.

1. Aziza lives near a university. _____

Who Is Watching You?

In many cities around the world, thousands of cameras now monitor the streets. Supporters say surveillance has reduced crime: in one city, street robberies declined by thirty percent after cameras were installed. However, critics argue that the benefit comes at a cost — our privacy. Modern systems use artificial intelligence to recognise faces in seconds. Some experts warn that if this data is not regulated, it could be used to control people. A survey in 2024 found that 65% of young people were worried about how their data is used, but only 20% had ever changed their privacy settings.

Back to the Village

Ten years ago, Jasur moved from his village near Namangan to Tashkent. He found a job in an office, but his life was stressful. He spent two hours a day in traffic jams, and most of his salary went on rent. 'If I had known how hard it would be, I would have stayed at home,' he admits. Last year, Jasur decided to go back. With his savings he opened a small farm and an online shop for dried fruit. Now he sells to customers all over the country. The air quality is better, his commute is five minutes, and his children play outside every day. 'The village has changed too,' he says. 'There is fast internet now, and that changed everything.'

The Drone Pilot

Five years ago, Sherzod was working as a taxi driver. 'I should have studied more at school,' he says, 'but I was lucky.' One day he watched a video about drones used in agriculture and decided to take an online course. Today he is a qualified drone pilot. He flies drones over cotton fields to check the plants and spray them with water. A farmer who used to need a week to check his fields can now do it in two hours. Sherzod believes that many jobs will become obsolete, 'but if you are ready to adapt, new careers will appear.' Next year he plans to open his own company.

Reading the Label

Last month, Dilnoza decided to check the labels on the food that her family buys. She was shocked. The 'healthy' juice which her children drank every day contained eight spoonfuls of sugar per bottle. The breakfast cereal, whose box showed happy children playing sport, was 30% sugar. 'I wish someone had told me earlier,' she says. Now Dilnoza cooks more homemade food and buys fewer processed products. Her family eats more vegetables and fibre, and portions are smaller. After a month, her son, who used to feel tired all the time, has much more energy.

1. Dilnoza checked the food labels. _____
2. The juice contained a lot of sugar. _____
3. The cereal was 50% sugar. _____

The Melting Ice of the Pamirs

The glaciers of the Pamir mountains supply water to millions of people in Central Asia. However, scientists say that they have lost about a third of their ice in the last fifty years. As the ice melts, rivers will first carry more water, which can cause floods. But in the long term there will be less water for agriculture, and droughts will become more common. 'I wish people understood that this is not a problem for the future — it is happening now,' says one researcher. It is high time countries in the region worked together to use water more carefully.

1. The Pamir glaciers supply water to millions of people. _____

A City Inside Walls

Itchan Kala, the old town of Khiva, became Uzbekistan's first UNESCO site in 1990. Inside its ancient walls there are more than fifty monuments, including mosques, madrasahs and palaces. Many local families still live there, which makes the town feel authentic. Despite its popularity, Khiva is far less crowded than Samarkand, especially in autumn. However, the number of visitors has doubled in the last five years. Some residents are happy because tourism has increased their income, whereas others complain that the old streets are becoming noisy and that souvenir shops are replacing traditional workshops.

1. Itchan Kala became a UNESCO site in 1990. _____

Life After Deleting Instagram

At twenty, Kamola had 15,000 followers and spent about five hours a day on social media. Her posts were seen by thousands of people, but she felt lonely. 'I compared myself with everyone. Every photo had to be edited and filtered,' she says. In 2023 she deleted her accounts for a month as an experiment. At first she felt anxious and kept reaching for her phone. After two weeks, she was sleeping better and had started reading again. She has since returned to social media, but only for thirty minutes a day. 'I still post, but I don't check how many likes I've received.'

Teenage Bankers

In 2024 a bank in Tashkent introduced debit cards for teenagers aged 14 to 17. Parents can send pocket money to the card and see every payment online. Supporters say it teaches financial literacy: teenagers learn to plan a budget and avoid impulse buying. Shohruh, 16, has been using the card for a year. 'At first I spent everything in two days,' he admits. 'If I had planned better, I wouldn't have been hungry at school!' Now he saves 20% of his money every month. Critics, however, worry that online banking makes spending too easy, because money doesn't feel real when you don't see it.
